Greenwire -- Fri., January 6, 2012 -- Read the full edition

1. SUPREME COURT: Big business backs David against EPA's Goliath in wetlands fight

When the Supreme Court hears oral arguments next week in a case about an Idaho couple's fight against U.S. EPA over whether they needed a wetlands permit to build their dream home, it appears at first blush to be a classic David versus Goliath battle. Mike and Chantell Sackett, from Priest Lake, Idaho, are the underdogs in that scenario, fighting an uphill battle against Washington bureaucrats over whether they have the right to contest in court EPA's order preventing them from constructing their house without a Clean Water Act permit. But the Sacketts have a powerful ally of their own: big business.
